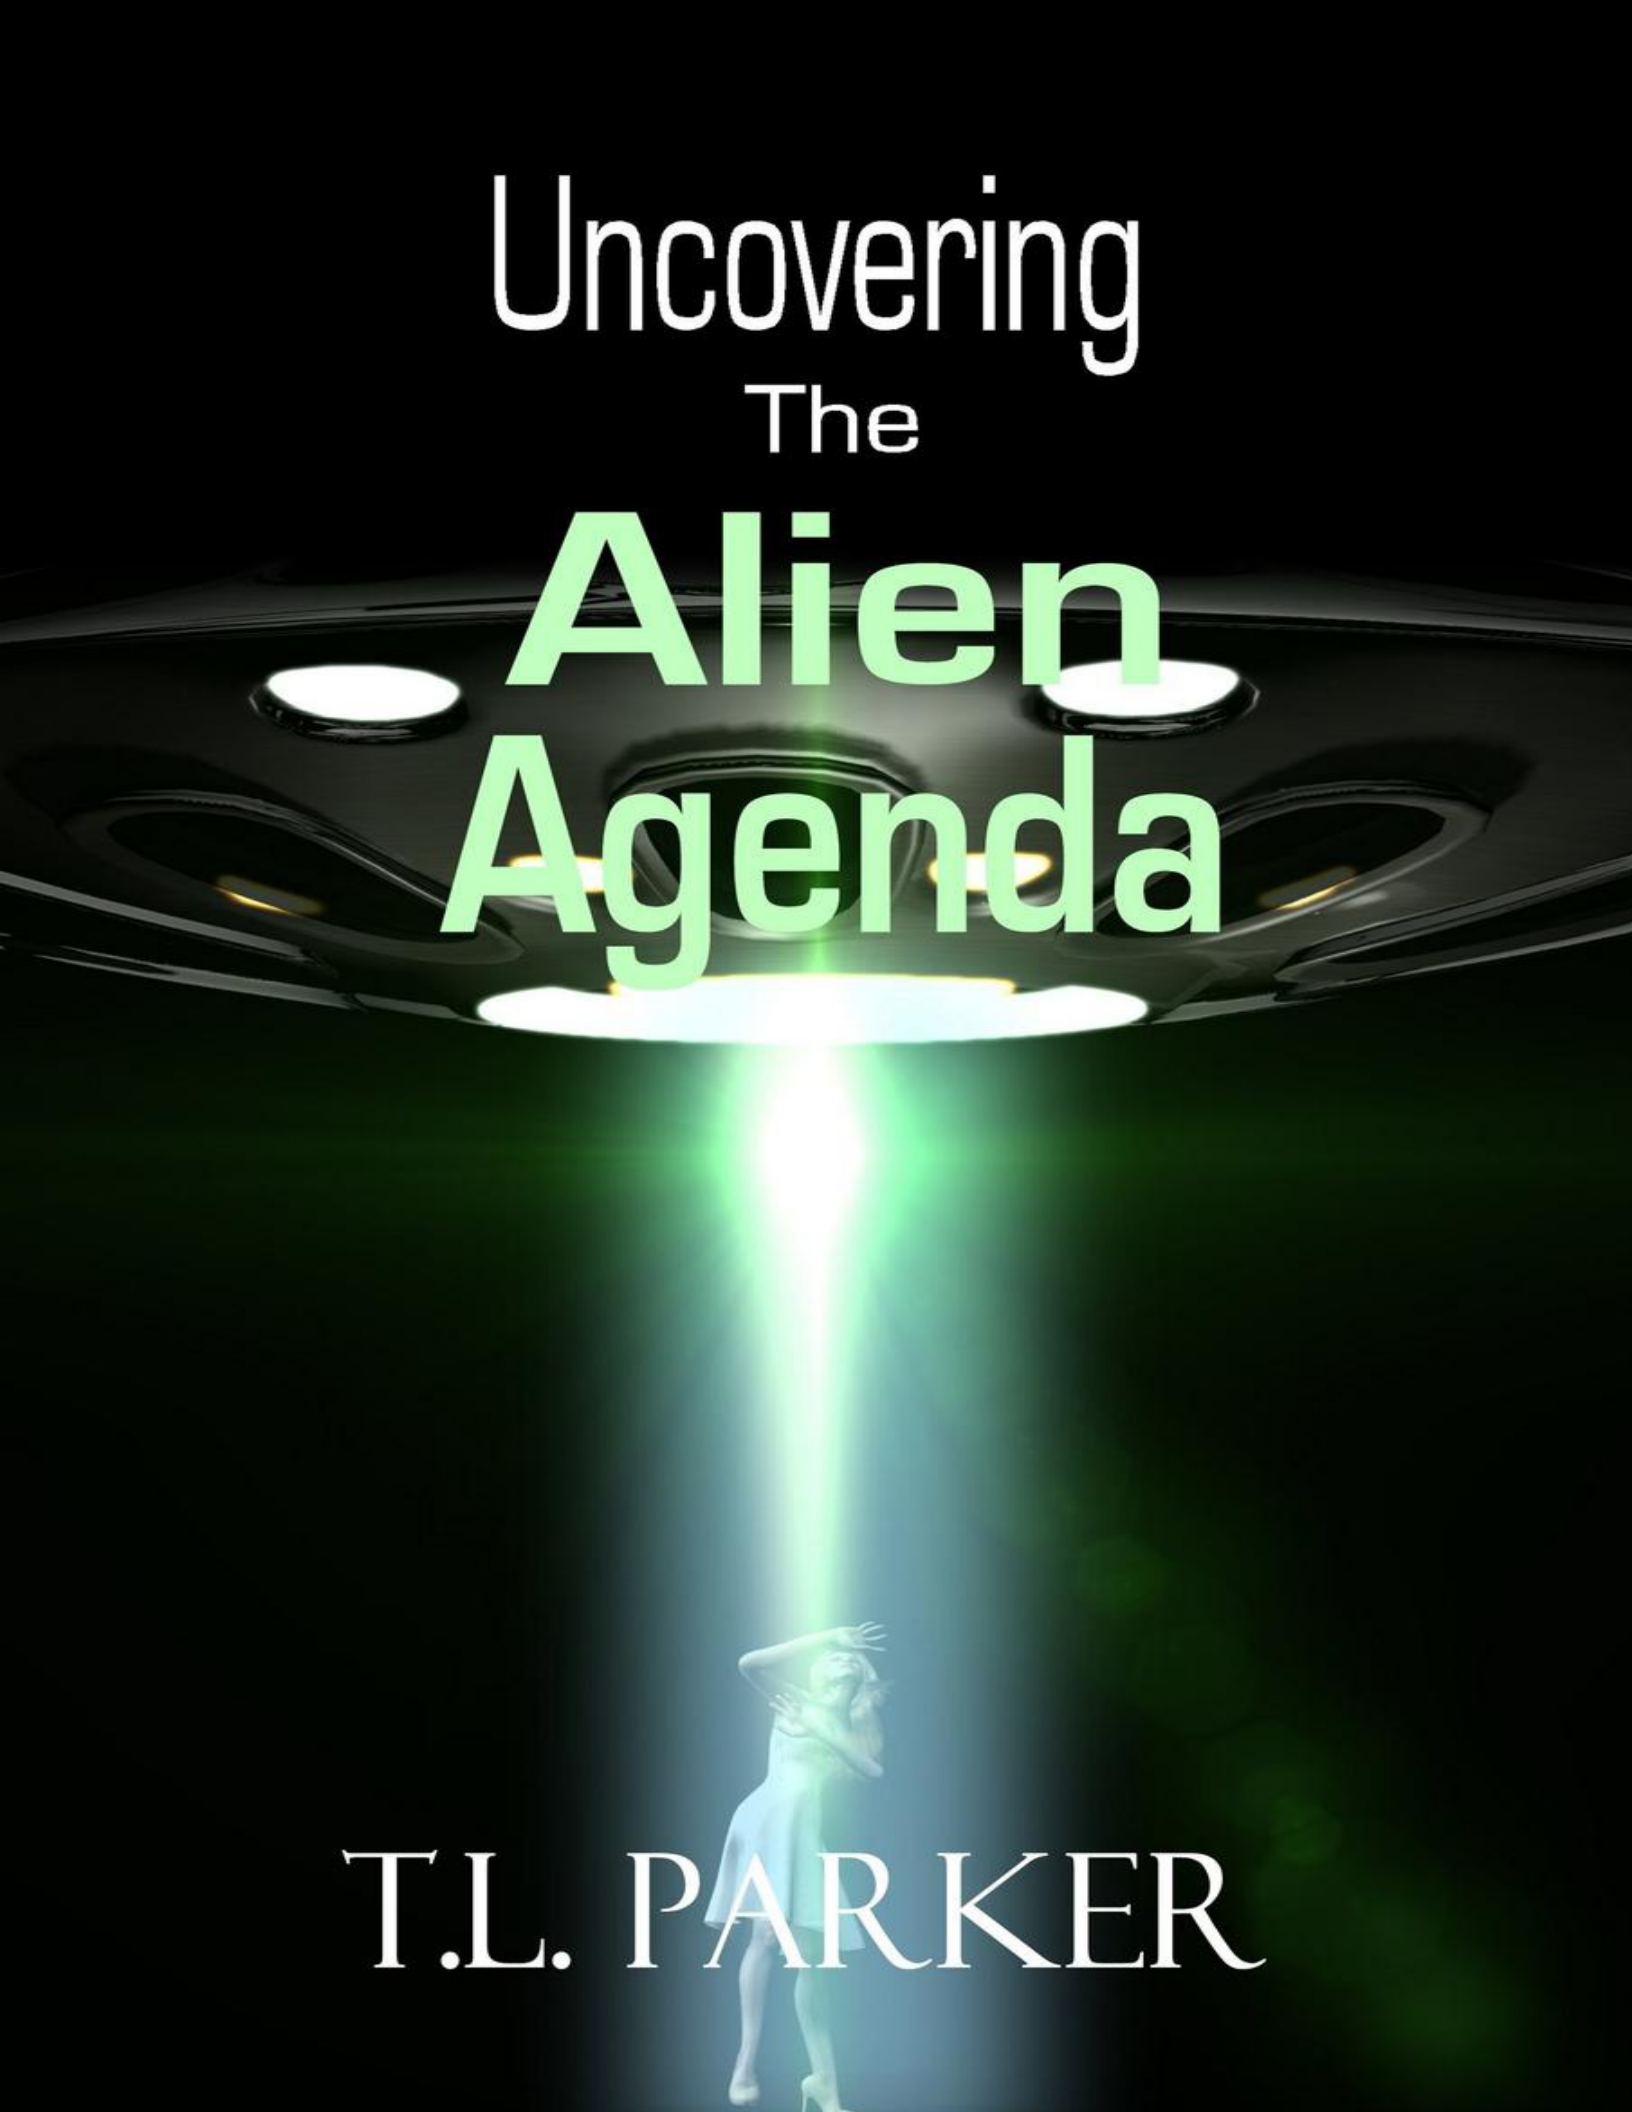
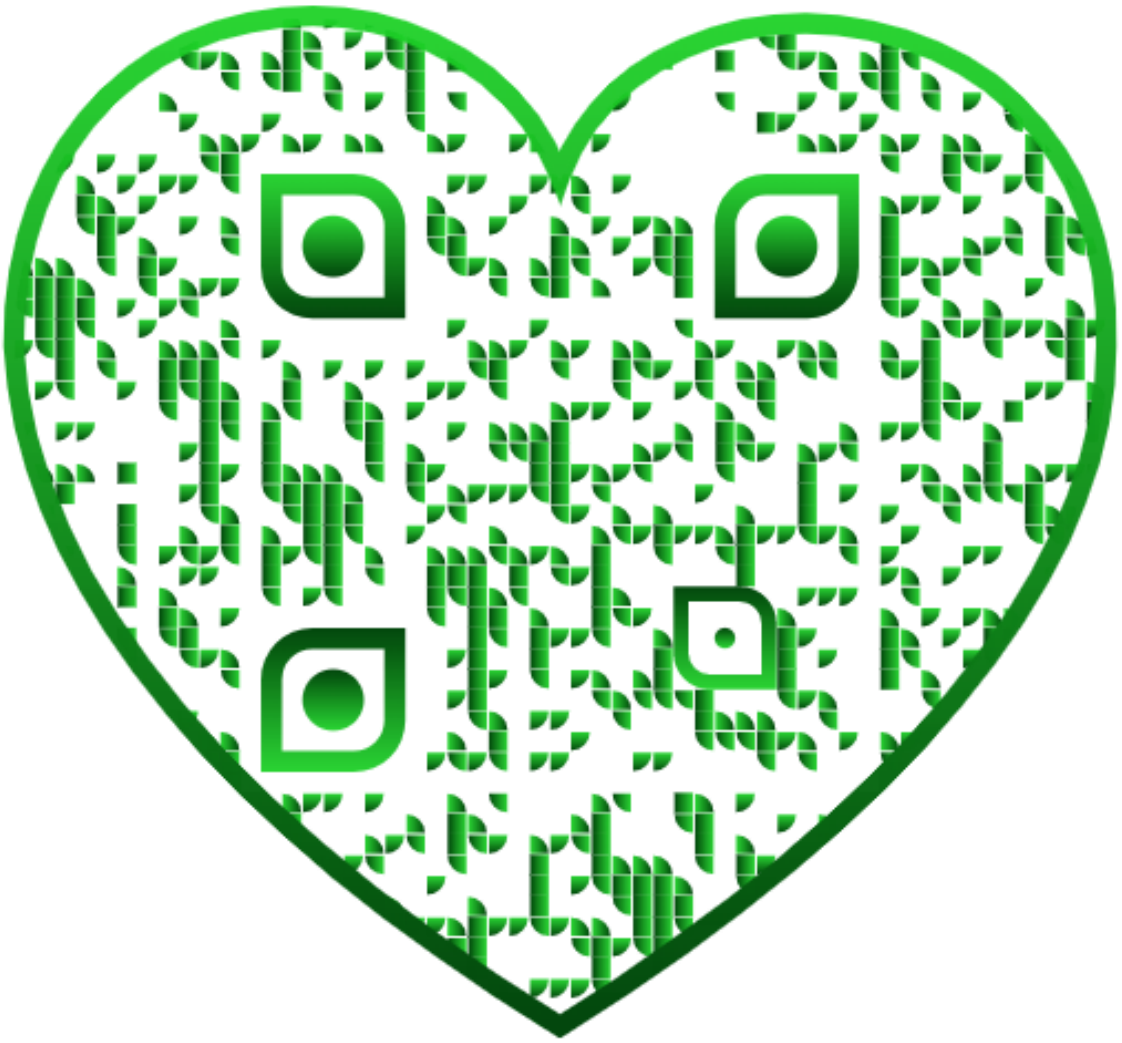
Uncovering The Alien Agenda



T.L. PARKER



Uncovering
The Alien Agenda

T.L. Parker

Copyright © 2017 T.L. Parker

Fringe Concepts Media
All Rights Reserved

Contents

Dissecting Clues
The Drake Equation
Part 1: Chapter 1 - The Grays
Chapter 2 -The Buff Ledge Case
Chapter 3 -The Doraty Case
Chapter 4 -The Allagash Case
Chapter 5 -The Salter Case
Chapter 6 - Camping Trip Encounter
Chapter 7 - The Betty and Barney Hill Case
Chapter 8 - Someone at the Door
Chapter 9 - Lights Outside the Window
Chapter 10 - Alien in the Hall
Part 2: Chapter 11 - Nordic Encounters
Chapter 12 - Montana Encounter
Chapter 13 - Arcadia Lake Case
Chapter 14 - The Dionisio Llanca Case
Chapter 15 - The Enrique Castillo Case
Part 3: Chapter 16 - Reptilian Abductions
Chapter 17 - Iowa Case
Chapter 18 - Waking Nightmare
Chapter 19 - Road Trip and Alien Abduction
Chapter 20 - Police Officer Abduction in Nebraska
Part 4: Chapter 21 - UFOs, Aliens, and the Physical Evidence
Chapter 22 - The Radar Evidence
Chapter 23 - UFO Fragment
Chapter 24 - Implants
Chapter 25 - The Alien Agenda
Author

Dear Readers

If you enjoy books that take you to the edge of reality and into the fringes, join the Fringe Concepts Newsletter and get the book, Creepy Ghost Stories. The download link is included with your final welcome email. Click Here or go to http://eepurl.com/cBog4H

Dissecting Clues

There is a mountain of evidence to suggest earth has been visited by beings from other planets, perhaps even other dimensions.

According to recent polls, over half of Americans believe there is likely life on other planets. A large percentage of those who believe that somewhere out there in the universe there is bound to be other advanced civilizations. A great many also believe the earth might have already been visited by extraterrestrials. Those who believe in ET visitation include some of the most prominent people in the world.

UFO and Abduction researchers have put forth a number of theories for why aliens may be visiting earth and interacting with humans.

The most frequent accounts of alien abduction involve the common Gray that is so prevalent in American UFO culture, but there are several beings involved in the abduction phenomena. As there seems to be more than one alien race contacting humans; it is possible there is also more than one agenda.

To better determine if the agenda, the stories of alien contact are separated by what type of alien race the alleged contact came from. In some cases, there appears to be more than one ET race working together.

There are likely clues in these stories, though there is no way to know for sure if there is any validity to these claims or even if the aliens are being truthful about their agenda.

In some of the following stories, the names of contactees have been changed to protect their privacy.

The Drake Equation

The Drake equation is a probabilistic argument used to arrive at an estimate of the number of active, communicative extraterrestrial civilizations in the Milky Way galaxy. The number of such civilizations is assumed to be equal to the mathematical product of

(i) the average rate of star formation in our galaxy,

(ii) the fraction of formed stars that have planets,

(iii) the average number of planets per star that can potentially support life,

(iv) the fraction of those planets that actually develop life,

(v) the fraction of planets bearing life on which intelligent, civilized life has developed,

(vi) the fraction of these civilizations that have developed communications technologies that release detectable signs into space, and

(vii) the length of time over which such civilizations release detectable signals.

According to the Drake Equation, there could be as many as 12,000 civilizations in our galaxy.

Part 1

Chapter 1

The Grays

The visitors known as the Grays are the most common in stories of alien contact. There appear to be two types of Grays, one type that averages between 5 and 8 feet tall, and a smaller version that averages between 3.5 and 4.5 feet.

Witnesses claim that during contact, the taller Grays appear to be in charge and the smaller Grays are the workers. Many of those who have had experiences with the tall Grays call them the doctors.

Both types of Grays have large heads and black eyes, though the taller Grays tend to have smaller eyes. Their arms and legs are spindly. Most witnesses describe these beings as having long fingers.

The Grays have small ear holes, slit-like nostrils, and a very small mouth. These beings are said to have completely hairless bodies.

It is worth noting that some researchers believe there are more than one species of Grays, though they all seem to have a similar agenda.

We can learn a lot about the agenda of the Grays by those who have interacted with them, but it’s important to keep in mind that some of what is uncovered could be screen memories.

For those unfamiliar with the UFO and Alien Abduction phenomena, a screen memory is a false memory planted in the abductee’s mind in an effort to cover up the details of the abduction.

In some cases, the screen memories are extremely bizarre, especially when it involves the abduction of a child. For example, the victim could remember being approached by a giant white owl or a miniature dinosaur.

Chapter 2

The Buff Ledge Case

On August 7th, 1968 the season was in full swing at the girl's summer camp in Vermont known as Buff Ledge near Lake Champlain.

The events of that summer day begin with the swim team taking a trip to Burlington for a meet. With the swim team gone the camp was nearly deserted. Among those who stayed behind were two camp employees, 19-year-old Janet Cornell, who worked as a water ski instructor, and 16-year-old Michael Lapp who worked in maintenance.

Taking advantage of the lull in the usual camp activity, the two friends decide to relax on the docks of Lake Champlain. While enjoying the sunset, they noticed a bright light in the sky. Although the light seemed a little out of place, Michael believed it was Venus.

This seemed like a plausible explanation up until the point the light started to descend from the darkening sky. As the two teenagers watched, the light appeared to move in their direction.

Three lights appeared to come out of the larger light and descend on the lake, at which point the largest of the three lights rose into the sky and out of sight. The lights that remained proceeded to do strange maneuvers that would have been impossible for conventional aircraft.

Janet and Michael continued to watch the strange performance until the lights came together to make a triangle shape. Shortly after this, two of the lights pulled away and disappeared, making a strange sound as they did.

The remaining light moved until it was over Janet and Michael before shooting up and disappearing. Before the two friends could recover from what they'd seen, the UFO was back.

Tilting to one side, the object plunged into the lake. A few minutes later, the object emerged from the water and started moving toward them.

Now that the UFO was closer, they could see what appeared to be a transparent dome on top of the craft and two small creatures. Michael would later describe the beings has having a long neck, big heads with no hair, as well as black eyes that extended to the sides of their heads.

Michael started to feel as if he had some kind of mental connection to the beings. To test his theory, he slapped his knee and one of the beings appeared to mimic him.

Soon the craft was directly above them at which point the two teens were completely engulfed by a beam of very bright light. When recounting the experiencing, the two claimed the light had a strange liquid-like feeling to it, but at the same time, gave them a feather light feeling, as if they were floating.

The next thing they knew they were again standing on the docks, staring at the craft, but now the sky was completely dark. According to Michael, Janet was extremely disoriented and in a semi-trance state.

As the UFO vanished from sight, the two teens heard the sounds of the swim team returning from Burlington.

In spite of witnessing such a bizarre event, Michael and Janet spent the next couple of weeks without discussing it. By the end of the season, they still hadn't brought up the subject. As the two parted ways at that point, they never did discuss the incident.

Reluctance to talk about these events seems to be common in cases where more than one person is involved, though reluctance might be the wrong word. It is more like it doesn't dawn on the abductees to discuss the incident, as if there were some kind of subconscious block that prevents open discussion.

Not all abductees are reluctant to talk about the incident but it happens often enough to consider that at least in some cases, they are told not to.

Over the next several years, Michael didn't give the incident much thought, though he would have nightmares about being abducted. The dreams would start without any obvious trigger and disappear just as fast.

After ten years of dealing with the odd nightmares, Michael finally decided to contact a UFO researcher about his experience. The investigator suggested regressive hypnosis as a method to uncover the root of his nightmares.

During hypnosis, Michael recounted being taken into the small craft and then to a larger one where he observed Janet lying on a metal table. During his own examination, the beings took body fluids and skin scrapings.

Michael's description of the beings is consistent with the average Gray, but with one exception. He claimed they had pointy fingers that appeared to be webbed.

When Janet underwent regressive hypnosis, her account was consistent with Michaels. To further substantiate the story, the investigator contacted others who had been at the camp that night, several of which claimed to have also have seen the lights over the lake at about the same time the alleged abduction would have occurred.

The Buff Ledge case is one of the most well-documented abduction cases of that time period and seems to correlate well with the Betty and Barney Hill case, as well as the numerous cases that would follow.

According to Michael, the beings told him the reason they were taken was to collect genetic material so they could create similar life forms to inhabit other places. Although accounts tend to differ on what exactly these beings are using the genetic material for, most abduction cases do tend to center around this theme.

Chapter 3

The Doraty Case

Although not common, there are a few abduction cases that add credence to the idea that animal mutilation cases may be connected to the UFO phenomena. The Doraty abduction is one of those cases.

On a May evening in 1973, Judy Doraty, her daughter, mother, and a sister-in-law were on their way home from a night of playing Bingo in Houston when her life was changed forever.

While on their way to Texas City the women observed a strange light hovering in the sky. Curious, they stopped to get a better look. Judy stood outside her car and watched the strange light until it disappeared. When the light was gone, she continued the drive home.

When Judy reported the incident to the air force they denied having any aircraft in the air at the time. The air force also denied that anything showed on their radar for that time period.

After the sighting, Judy started suffering from headaches. Although she saw several doctors, they were unable to discover an underlying cause. Eventually, Judy was referred to Dr. Leo Sprinkle, a well known Ufologist and hypnotist. While undergoing regression therapy they uncovered several details of her experience that she had been unable to recall before.

Under hypnosis, Judy recalled seeing a cow being pulled up into some kind of craft. She also recalled that she'd been taken aboard the craft, though she felt as if she were in two different places at the same time. While on the craft, she had the sensation of standing next to her car.

Judy described a pale beam of light shining down on the car. Although it was light, she said it almost felt as if it had some kind of substance to it. The next thing she remembered was being on the craft and watching as two beings resembling the common Gray, remove parts of the calf.

Her next memory is of seeing her daughter on what she called an operating table. She tells them to leave her daughter alone but they ignore her. The beings don't seem to have any emotions and simply go about their task as if she isn't there. From what she could tell, the beings were taking samples, such as skin scrapings, etc.

Judy claims that she was also made to drink some kind of strange substance. At a later time, Judy's daughter would also undergo regression and her account backed up that of her mother's.

Again, here is a story that describes the light as feeling as if it has substance to it. This case also involves the medical examination and collection of biological material. As with many cases, the small Gray beings are described as having no emotion.

Approximately a year later, another family would witness a UFO in the same area. The victims in that incident wouldn't be as lucky as Judy and her daughter. These witnesses would suffer from burns and radiation poisoning that eventually kills one of them.

Chapter 4

The Allagash Case

One of the best-documented abduction cases happened in Maine, at an area known as the Allagash Waterway.

Like many notorious abduction cases, the Allagash case involved multiple witnesses, including twin brothers Jack and Jim Weiner, as well as their friends Chuck Rak and Charlie Foltz.

In August 1976, the four men decided to take a trip to the Allagash Waterway, hoping for some outdoor adventure, as well as some rest and relaxation. They started out with a canoe trip to the mouth of Eagle Lake where they intended to do some fishing off a nearby bank.

After several hours with no luck, the men decided to try their hand at some night fishing. Before going back out in the canoe, they built a bonfire on the shore as a beacon that would help guide them back in the dark.

The men had been on the lake for some time when they noticed a light in the sky. The light had an odd quality to it and was much brighter than a normal star.

The strange light hovered over some nearby trees, approximately two hundred yards away. Another bizarre aspect of the light is that it changed colors as it moved back and forth. It would go from red to green, followed by pale yellow.

According to the witnesses, the object was huge. They estimated it to be about 80 feet in diameter.

As the men watched, the object moved across the tops of the trees and along the bank, getting closer to the men in the canoe. At this point, Charlie Foltz used his flashlight to signal the object. It then started moving quickly toward the canoe.

As the object drew closer, the panicked men started for the shore. Their frantic paddling couldn’t save them from the light that shot out from the object, surrounding them and their canoe.

One moment the men were trying to get to shore and the next, they found themselves standing on the bank, staring up at the object. This time when Charlie pointed his flashlight, the UFO ascended into the night sky and faded from view, though it projected its beam at them once more before disappearing.

Feeling somewhat disoriented, the men were shocked to see that the fire had burned down to nothing but coals.

When setting out in the canoe, the fire was large enough that it should have taken a few hours to burn down to ash and coals. It seemed that far more time had passed than they first thought.

As the four men packed up their stuff and prepared to return to their lives, there was almost no discussion of the incident. Although they preferred to forget the incident, that night would have far more impact on their lives than any of them suspected.

All four men returned to the everyday grind of their respective careers. In time, the night of the UFO would begin to have a profound effect on their lives.

As is the case with many abductees, the men would begin having nightmares. The first was Jack Weiner.

Jack's dreams were populated by beings with long necks and large heads. The strange monsters that traversed his nightmares seemed to always be doing something with his arm. In his dreams, he would see the other three men sitting on a nearby bench, but they were unable to help him.

According to Jack, the beings in his dreams had large eyes, much like the average Gray, though his account varies from the norm in the fact that he claimed their eyes almost seemed metallic. He would later relate that they had four fingers on each hand.

It wasn't until 1988 that Jim Weiner attended a UFO conference hosted by Raymond Fowler, though he mainly did so out of pure curiosity.

At some point, Weiner related his encounter to Fowler. Intrigued by the story and the possibility of additional witnesses, Fowler suggested the men undergo regressive hypnosis.

The four friends did undergo several sessions of regressive hypnosis and consequently discovered that not only were all four men abducted that night but they had all experienced similar examinations. During their abduction experience, skin and fluid samples were collected.

While under hypnosis, they recalled the canoe being engulfed in light and then suddenly finding themselves onboard a craft.

All the men described the beings in much the same way. Descriptions of the craft and the examination room were also consistent. They claimed to have been put on a metallic table while they were undergoing horrific examinations that included the insertion of medical like instruments into their bodies.

All four men were subjected to psychological examinations, as well as put through polygraph tests. It was determined they were all mentally fit and truthful in their accounts of that night on the lake.

In this case, like many others, the witnesses describe being engulfed by a bright light. While onboard the craft, the men are subjected to examination and biological material is taken. They had only fragmented memory of the incident until put under hypnosis. In later years, Jack would suffer from seizures that could be related to his experience.

Chapter 5

The Salter Case

John Salter was a faculty member of North Dakota University. In the spring of 1988, Mr. Salter was scheduled to speak in several locations across the southern United States.

In the company of his son, John set out in his truck for the first stop in that speaking tour.

He'd planned to drive Route 61 heading for his first engagement, but for reasons he couldn't explain later, he veered off the planned route. An hour later, John realized he was traveling in the wrong direction.

Since it was already getting late, John and his son decided to call it a night and start fresh the next morning.

Although baffled by the weird events of the day before, father and son tried to forget about it as they set out on their original route.

Out of nowhere, they noticed a bright light in the sky that looked to them like a UFO. They would later describe it as emitting a silver colored energy field.

As soon as they saw the hovering object, they were both struck with the strange feeling that they'd seen it somewhere before. They were suddenly struck by flashes of memory of what had really happened the day before.

The previous afternoon, they'd been traveling along at a decent speed when they noticed a strange object suspended in the sky. The object landed in the middle of the road, forcing John to stop.

Amazed by what they were seeing, the two of them stepped out of the truck. That's when they noticed a group of small beings headed toward them.

From a distance, they resembled children. It wasn't until he saw the tall one that John realized they weren't human. As there were in a state of paralysis, the two men couldn't resist when they were led toward the waiting craft.

Although he felt some fear, for some reason John was confident the aliens meant them no harm. He would later recount how he felt a sense of security in their presence, as if he knew the beings would protect them.

During the experience, John and his son were led taken to a circular room and placed into reclining chairs, much like a dentist chair. When relating the incident, both John and his son told of being paralyzed while they were subjected to strange medical examinations.

During John's examination, an implant was inserted through one of his nostrils. In spite of the fact the procedure should have caused excruciating pain, he felt nothing.

When the implant was in place, the beings inserted some kind of instrument into his neck and then his chest.

John had enough medical knowledge to realize the areas of his body that were being examined were the locations of major glands related to metabolism, immunity, and growth.

When the aliens were done with their medical procedures, John was told that he would see them again at a later time.

After returning home, John noticed several things. His health seemed to improve and his hair was growing in thicker and at a faster rate. He also had a scar on his forehead that faded almost completely.

Unlike so many stories of abduction, John and his son had a constructive experience that may have actually brought positive results to their lives.

Almost every aspect of the experience is similar to the common Gray abduction, except the fear. This may indicate that a contactee's experience is dependent on their fear or lack thereof.

The description of the reclining chair is another detail that seems to be nearly as common as the metal table during abductions.

Chapter 6

Camping Trip Encounter

It was a warm fall evening in England when Jack and Amanda decided to spend some time enjoying the outdoors and decided to go camping. It was their first night and as they were feeling exceptionally tired, the couple decided to retire early.

Sometime in the middle of the night, Jack's sleep was interrupted by his need to use the restroom.

When he stepped out of the tent he noticed some orange lights in a nearby field. As Jack stood in front of the tent and watched the lights, he called to his wife to come out and take a look. Crawling from her makeshift bed, Amanda joined her husband outside the tent and was stunned by what she saw.

With a full moon that night, it wasn't difficult to see that the orange lights appeared to be coming from a flying object, though they couldn't detect any sound.

Strangely enough, the couple wasn't afraid, though they were curious. Amanda continued watching the lights as her husband ran to the car to retrieve his camera.

This is the last thing Amanda remembered before suddenly finding herself back in the tent.

As she sat in her bed, feeling somewhat dazed, Jack entered the tent. He informed her that they were now gone.

That's when they noticed the time. An astonishing three hours had passed since Jack had first got up to use the restroom, though it seemed no more that a few minutes had elapsed. With no further discussion, the couple went to sleep.

It wasn't until the next day that Jack recalled what happened during those missing hours. He'd blacked out and when he came to, he was a very brightly lit circular room. Jack recalled that there were several people around him, though he couldn't see their faces due to the fact that they were all wearing white hooded robes.

While lying on some kind of cold metal table, he was put through several medical procedures. He couldn't remember feeling frightened in any way. In fact, he felt good about the entire experience.

Although there is no way of knowing for sure if the beings Jack encountered were Grays, the experience does seem to mirror most of the reported encounters with this type of being. It is possible his recollection of hooded figures was actually a screen memory. Beings in white robes are likely to be far less frightening than an encounter with Grays.

Chapter 7

The Betty and Barney Hill Case

The Hill case is one of the most significant cases of alien abduction ever documented.

A single night in 1961 would change the lives of the Hill family forever. Barney Hill was a 39-year-old US Postal worker who was considered to be an upstanding and honest man by those who knew him. His wife, 41-year-old Betty Hill was just as well liked. She held a Master's Degree and was employed as a social worker for the state's Department of Family Services.

Up until that September night in 1961, the Hills led a normal and somewhat quiet life in New Hampshire.

Barney had recently been diagnosed with a stomach ulcer. Figuring they were in desperate need of some away time, the couple decided to take a quick trip to Canada. While on vacation, they visited Montreal and Niagara Falls.

On September 19th the couple started their trip back to Portsmouth. They would later recall how crisp and clear the air was as the drove along US Route 3. With only a sliver of a moon in the sky and surrounded by thick woods on both sides of the road, it was also very dark.

They were about three miles south of Lancaster when Barney noticed what he first thought was a bright star or planet, but as he watched it became apparent the light was actually moving.

Baffled, he points out the light to his wife and they both started watching its erratic movements.

Barney was convinced it was a plane, though he was at a loss to explain how it could appear and disappear. On the other hand, Betty wasn't so sure. The craft's movements didn't seem to align with how a plane moved through the sky.

While keeping an eye on the object, the couple continued on to Flume, which is north of Woodstock.

About the time they reached Indian Head, Barney decided to pull off the road and get a better look at the object. Using the binoculars he had in the car, he studied the object and was shocked to see what appeared to be a flat craft with multi-colored lights. He was also stunned to see rows of what he believed to be windows.

At this point, the craft appeared to be moving in their direction. When it was approximately a hundred feet away he could see silhouettes in the windows.

Suddenly feeling fearful and anxious, Barney ran back to the car where his wife was still waiting for him. When they were both safely in the car, he pulled back onto the road and sped toward home, never realizing that somehow, they'd lost two hours of time.

Soon after resuming their journey, the couple realized the craft was gone. At about this time they heard a series of strange beeps. This happened twice before they realized that they'd somehow traveled several miles. Almost instantly they'd driven the thirty-five miles from Indian Head to Ashland.

The couple was quiet for the rest of the trip. Once home, they went to bed and slept until afternoon.

When Betty finally woke, she decided to call her sister and tell her what they'd seen the night before. Right away, her sister recommended they report the incident to Pease Air Force Base.

In spite of the fact that Barney was against making a big fuss of the situation and actually preferred to keep quiet about the entire incident, Betty decided to follow the advice of her sister.

When she called the base, she spoke to Major Paul W. Henderson. At that time, Major Henderson informed her that radar had detected a UFO in that area at about the same time the incident took place.

Of course, the couple didn't report their abduction at the time because they didn't recall that part of the incident. It wasn't long before Betty started suffering from nightmares. In these nightmares, she and her husband were taken aboard the craft.

It could be argued that the sighting itself could have spurred on the nightmares, though up until this point there had never been an abduction widely reported. There was no base for her subconscious to draw from. As far as the general public was concerned, the UFOs sighted did not interact with observers.

There were abductions that did take place prior to 1961, though they weren't usually reported to authorities and didn't appear in the news.

Still, UFOs were gaining ground in popular culture so it wasn't long before a couple writers got wind of the story and decided to interview the couple. During that interview, they documented the night's events, including times and locations. It was then the Hills realized they'd lost quite a large chunk of time. There were approximately two hours they couldn't account for.

During the initial interviews, a former Air Force intelligence Officer, Major James MacDonald was present.

Apparently, Betty's nightmares prompted her to write to Major Donald Kehoe, who sent her information to Walter Webb at the Hayden Planetarium.

At the time, Mr. Webb was a scientific advisor for NICAP, also known as the National Investigations Committee on Arial Phenomena. What Mr. Webb did with the information is unknown. If he took further action, it wasn't included in any official documentation of the case.

Major MacDonald suggested the couple undergo regressive hypnosis as a method of recovering possible suppressed memories of those lost two hours.

In the spring of 1962, the couple did contact a psychiatrist about going through hypnosis sessions but didn't actually commit to participating in regression hypnosis sessions.

While on the fence concerning the use of hypnosis, Betty's nightmares continued and Barney health took a turn for the worse. His ulcer was worse and he was again suffering from high blood pressure.

Finally, the Hills contacted a well-known neurologist and psychiatrist in Boston. Dr. Benjamin Simon was one of the most respected doctors in his field, which gave the couple more confidence in the possible use of regressive hypnosis.

After a couple sessions, Dr. Simon gave a preliminary diagnosis of anxiety syndrome, probably related to their sighting on September 19, 1961. Today, the diagnosis would probably be along the lines of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder.

Dr. Simon decided the best way to get to the bottom of what was causing their anxiety was through regressive hypnosis. After six months of slow progress, he came to the conclusion that the Hills had been abducted on the night of their sighting.

During the sessions, it was discovered that while driving home that night, their car stalled. It was then the craft landed on the road in front of their vehicle.

The couple was then taken from the car and into the craft. Once inside the craft, they were given what they described as a medical exam. Before they were released, they were instructed not to talk about the incident.

Both the Hills described the beings as having pear- shaped bald heads and gray skin. They were approximately five feet tall and had slanted eyes. This was the first time the classic Gray would be named in a publicized abduction incident.

While on the craft, the couple was taken to separate locations to undergo medical and mental examinations.

During the exams, the beings took samples of their skin, hair, and nails. Betty's exam included the insertion of a long needle into her navel. The beings told her it was a pregnancy test. Barney related that during his exam, he was made to give a semen sample.

One detail that came out of the hypnosis sessions was that the beings did not have any concept of time.

During her time on the ship, Betty asked the beings where they were from. In response, she was shown a star map.

At the conclusion of the experience, the couple was returned to their car. The last thing they remember was seeing a glow in the sky.

Prior to coming forward publicly, the Hills did try to keep the experience private. It was during this time that inaccurate stories started cropping up in the news. For this reason, the Hills decided to come forward with the real story.

Eventually, Dr. Simon came forward and stated that it was his opinion that the Hills were not in any way fabricating their story. He stated that there were a number of conclusions that could be reached, including that the experience actually happened or that they had suffered some kind of shared hallucination related to an actual event, though he had no way of knowing what that event might be.

Once the case was made public, a number of investigators took an interest in it. One of those investigators was Dr. J. Allen Hyneck, a Professor of Astronomy at Northwestern University. Dr. Hyneck would later act as an Air Force Consultant on Aerial Phenomena.

Eventually, Dr. Hyneck would go on to create the Center for UFO Studies.

The other well-known researcher to take an interest in the case was Stanton T. Friedman, a nuclear physicist and one of the few scientists that work full time investigating the UFO phenomena.

Dr. Hyneck concluded that the couple's stories matched, although they had been put under hypnosis without the other being present.

After spending many hours with the Hills and researching the case, Friedman stated that not only himself, but many scientists and investigators had come to the same conclusion; the Hills were not making up the incident.

Most abductees who come forward not only don't make any money off relating their experience but also risk ruining their careers. This would have been especially true in the early 1960s. Not only is there no evidence the Hills made up their story, there also doesn't seem to be any logical reason for them to get involved in some elaborate hoax.

Betty's memory of the star map is one of the most intriguing elements of this story. She would later recall the map as being a 3-dimensional image. At the time, the map didn't seem to match any star system.

This would later change when Astronomers at Ohio State University used a computer to give them an exact positional view beyond the system of Zeta Reticuli 1 and Zeta Reticuli. The view had them looking in the direction of our sun. What the computer replicated was a nearly perfect match to Betty's star map.

Over fifty years later, the Betty and Barney Hill story is still as fascinating as ever. Although their abduction was not the first, it was the Hill case that would put a spotlight on purported alien abductions and spur serious research into this area of the UFO phenomena.

Chapter 8

Someone at the Door

A former US Marine, whom we'll can Dan was looking outside his apartment window one night and viewed what he called a large, pulsating ball of light about three hundred feet above the building across the street.

Dan managed to grab his phone and take video of the object. Soon after submitting his video to a file-sharing site, he received a strange visit. While sleeping, he woke to someone trying to open the front door and saw the door handle moving. At that point, he heard a voice telling him not to be afraid.

Dan began to experience missing time. During one of these episodes, he recalled being in a room with a female. He described her as having black eyes and features that were not entirely human. She also had an elongated skull. His next memory is of being outside a cylinder-shaped ship and waving as it disappeared.

Unlike some abduction stories, Dan wasn't left feeling disoriented and fearful. His experience appears to be exactly the opposite. He is left with a feeling of transformation for the good.

Although he doesn't claim to have seen beings exactly, like most accounts of the Grays, the female's black eyes could mean that she is somehow connected to that race. By most accounts, the Grays do not seem to have any problem entering through a locked door, so it is peculiar that his experience would start with some trying to force their way into his home.

This could possibly be a dream or perhaps this is a different race of extraterrestrial that doesn't have the same technology, though this is doubtful. Nearly all abduction stories include the beings having the ability to enter closed areas with no trouble.

The elongated shape of the female's head sounds similar to depictions found in ancient Egypt and Peru. The practice of artificial cranial deformation can be found throughout human history. One theory is that these ancient people believed that those with elongated skulls were higher life forms. Some believe this practice was introduced as a way to mimic the appearance of their gods.

In nearly all accounts, those who encounter the Grays claim that they appear to be genderless, void of emotion, and behave like worker bees. The taller Grays are often referred to as doctors and are the ones that seem to be in charge of the smaller Grays, as well as the physical examinations.

Taking into account witness testimony, one conclusion that could be drawn is that the Grays are some kind of biological android and their main purpose appears to be to monitor humans. If the Grays are biological androids or even a species created as watchers, the question would then be, who created them?

It is worth noting that in many abduction accounts, the victim claims to see the Nordic type aliens in the presence of the Grays. Most believe the Nordics are the good guys. The reason for this is that abduction experiences involving the Nordics don't seem to be as traumatic, though that isn't always the case.

One answer could lie in the Anunnaki myths. Ancient Sumerian artwork depicting the helpers of the Sumerian gods; also known as the Anunnaki, bear a striking resemblance to the Grays.

The creation myth in the bible originates from ancient Sumerian text and is actually the story of how the Anunnaki created humans. The original text talks about gods, as in more than one, as opposed to how it was translated for inclusion in Genesis. All through the Bible, there are references to other gods, so it is fairly obvious that whoever is considered the one God in the Bible was completely aware of other beings that early man believed to be gods.

One theory is that the Anunnaki gave a boost to human evolution by infusing their DNA with that of ancient man's to create the Adamu or Adam. If this is the case, it isn't a stretch to believe the Anunnaki may still be using the DNA of their creations for some purpose. That would explain why the main purpose of abduction in the case of the Grays would be to collect biological material.

Taking this into consideration, it's possible the Grays of modern abduction stories are the same helpers depicted in the ancient artwork of the Sumerians. If that is the case, could the Nordics seen with the Grays be the Anunnaki of the Sumerian creation myth?

Chapter 9

Lights Outside the Window

As a young boy, Robby had a terrifying experience. On nights he couldn't sleep, he would stay up late watching television, even though he wasn't supposed to.

His bedroom on the second story of his childhood home was only large enough for his bed, a dresser, and a TV, which was located against the same wall as his window.

With everyone in the house asleep, Robby watched TV, hoping he would get tired enough to fall asleep. Sometime between 2:00 AM and 5:00 AM, he saw a flash of light from the corner of his eye.

At first, he didn't pay it too much mind, as it wasn't unusual for the neighbors to be up late, especially as it was summer. A few minutes later the program he was watching is interrupted when the TV screen turns to white snow. He recalls there was also loud static coming from the TV.

Suddenly, the TV went off and he was plunged into complete darkness. As his eyes adjusted to the dim moonlight streaming in through his bedroom window, he noticed what appeared to be a gray humanoid figure. The being seemed to cast off a purple glow, though it was very dim.

Robby describes the being as being about five feet tall and having a large head and skinny neck. He also said the being had strange hands.

Terrified, Robby hid his head under the blankets. At this point, he realized that he was now paralyzed and unable to move. It is important to note that in this story, he'd already moved beneath the covers, so the sleep paralysis explanation doesn't hold much water. Eventually, Robby lost consciousness. When he woke in the morning, his mind felt a little fuzzy. Although he doesn't recall any incidents prior to this or after, he claims that he still gets a strange feeling where staring up at the night sky.

Chapter 10

Alien in the Hall

Although as a child, Amy would wake in the night to see frightening images of beings in her room, her first clear memory of a visitation by the creatures known as Grays happened when she was about eight.

Amy recalls waking in the middle of the night and opening her eyes. As she was facing her bedroom door, she immediately noticed the figure in the hall. She describes the beings as being having a grayish skin tone, though there was a green glow around him. According to her recollection, the being was approximately four feet tall.

Frightened by what she was seeing, Amy covered her head and somehow fell asleep. In the morning, everything seemed normal. Although she never saw the creature again, she will experience anxiety on certain nights, as if she can somehow sense they will be coming for her.

Taking into account those abduction stories that have been documented, it is possible that this girl, as well as the boy in the previous account, were probably abducted during their encounters.

Both accounts are incredibly similar in their description of the beings, their age, as well as the fact that in spite of witnessing something that would terrify most people to the point that they would be awake for hours, they inexplicably fell asleep.

Although neither victim could recall previous or future incidents, they both experienced similar anxiety issues.

In conclusion, it is fair to say that researchers who conclude the main interest of the Grays is to collect biological material would seem to be on target, though there is not enough evidence to conclude the sole purpose of their program is the creation of hybrids, as some have speculated.

The Grays would appear to be running an abduction program similar to what humans do with animals in the wild, right down to tagging and tracking them.

Could earth and humans be the equivalent?

Part 2

Chapter 11

Nordic Encounters

The beings commonly referred to as the Nordics are even more of a mystery than the Grays. Encounters with the Nordics are not nearly as common as those who report abduction experiences involving the Grays, and for the most part, the abductees don't seem to experience as much trauma.

These beings tend to be tall and well built. Most who have encountered the Nordics claim they have white hair, though some have reported encountering similar beings with a variety of hair colors. According to witnesses, these beings have intense blue eyes. They are known as the Nordics due to their resemblance Nordic humans.

It is worth noting that even those Nordics who are considered old, look fairly young and their age seems to be counted in centuries. When they are asked how old they are, they may reply that they are a hundred years old, three hundred years old, or even older.

Coincidently, the gods of ancient people, such as the Sumerians, were said to live for several hundred years. Many of the characters in the Christian Bible are said to have lived for centuries. Could these be the same beings?

Some abductees claim the Grays are sometimes present during encounters with the Nordic. This adds to the possibility that these beings are actually the Anunnaki and the Grays their helpers.

The ancient Sumerians describe the helpers of the Anunnaki as alive but not alive, which is much the same way that those who have had experiences with the Grays describe them. Some have speculated that they are actually biological androids. In addition, ancient Sumerian artwork that depicts these helpers does bear a striking resemblance to the Gray aliens.

Whoever these Nordics are, they do tend to have an interest in humans, as well as the earth.

Chapter 12

Montana Encounter

On a spring day in May of 1940, a 37-year-old Dutch immigrant miner by the name of Udo Wartena was working on a claim located at the base of Boulder Mountain, southeast of Helena Montana.

About mid-morning, Udo noticed a strange humming noise but at first believed it to be an aircraft. When the noise continued, he climbed to higher ground to get a better look. At that point, he observed what would today be referred to as a UFO or flying saucer.

He described it as being a massive disk-shaped metallic object, estimating the size to be about thirty-five feet high and over a hundred feet across. He recalled how the object reminded him of two soup plates that had been put together.

The object was hovering over a meadow, just above his makeshift dam.

As he watched, a staircase unfolded from the bottom of the craft. A man emerged and started walking in Udo's direction.

Mr. Wartena felt no fear. On the contrary, he was intrigued enough to walk into the meadow and meet the man. The craft's occupant stopped about ten feet away.

Mr. Warenta described the being as being a fairly nice looking man. He was wearing light gray overalls or what might be referred today as a body suit. The man's footwear was also gray and appeared to be made of the same type of material.

He describes the man as being about his own age and having snow-white hair and skin so fair it almost appears translucent.

According to Mr. Wartena's account, the man came over and offered his hand before explaining that they hadn't been aware anyone was in the area. He went on to tell Mr. Wartena they preferred not to be seen.

The man then asked if they could take some water for their ship, referring to a dam Udo was using for his mining operation.

Mr. Wartena saw no reason to object, so he told him it was okay. The man then made some kind of hand signal and a hose dropped from the craft to the water below.

When speaking, the man used English, though it was obvious to Mr. Wartena that he didn't have a good command of the language, as it was necessary for him to speak slowly.

At this point, the man then asked him if he would like to come aboard the ship. Still curious about the object, Mr. Wartena agreed.

When he was near the ship, he noticed how the low hum seemed to vibrate right through him, but once onboard the noise was barely noticeable.

The room he entered was fairly small, approximately twelve by sixteen feet. He described the ship as being illuminated by some type of indirect lighting. He also recalled seeing some a sliding door at the far end of the room.

Sliding doors and indirect lighting would not become popular in the mainstream for years to come, yet Mr. Wartena sees them on this craft. Around the walls, he sees nice upholstered benches. Decades later, many abductees would describe being placed in similar rooms.

While onboard, he would meet another man who also had snow-white hair and a fair complexion, though he looked slightly older than the first man.

Although the men looked human, Mr. Wartena obviously noticed that something wasn't quite right with their appearance. Perhaps it was the fact that they looked young, but had such white hair. Either way, Mr. Wartena was more curious about their age than their origins, so he asked the men how old they were.

The first man told Mr. Wartena that if he were to measure his age in human years, he would be approximately six hundred years old. The other man revealed that he would be over nine hundred years old.

During Mr. Wartena's conversation with the men, he discovered the beings knew over five hundred different languages.

Now that he felt more comfortable, Mr. Wartena asked the men why they would take water from the stream instead of the nearby lake. He was told the stream water was less contaminated with impurities, such as algae. They told him they needed the water to extract hydrogen, which was used to fuel the craft.

They then went on to explain how the craft worked. He is told that it operated by two disks similar to flywheels that rotate in opposite directions, creating an electromagnetic force that works to overcome the gravitational pull of planets but also uses the pull of planets and stars to travel. It was explained that the system worked in a way that was similar to sliding across a sheet of ice.

The men also told Mr. Wartena that it was imperative that mankind develops a more practical energy source.

It is worth noting that this information was relayed to Mr. Wartena in 1940, long before there was much concern over the use of fossil fuels and the impact they have on the earth's environment.

Another compelling aspect of this story is how similar Mr. Wartena's description is to the propulsion system Robert Lazar was said to have been working on while reverse engineering of an alien craft the United States had in holding at the Area 51 base in Nevada, though Lazar's claims would come many decades later.

At some point, Mr. Wartena got around to asking the men where they came from and was given a name of a planet, though he did not think to record it at the time and consequently, couldn't recall it later.

They further explained that their purpose for visiting the earth was to share information and to give help when needed. The men also claimed that their race often intermingles with humans, this being possible due to how closely they resemble humans.

This would indicate that these beings have been involved in observing the progress of human societies for quite a long time, possibly even thousands of years.

When Mr. Wartena asked them if they knew about Jesus and human religions, he was told that they would like to answer his questions about this, but could not interfere with human development.

As this was the only question the visitors refused to answer, it would seem they must have known something about human religion that if revealed, would likely cause some chaos.

This is curious, considering the event took place in 1940 when Christianity was far more prevalent in western societies than it is today. Udo was obviously interested in religion enough to ask the men about it, which would likely mean it was important to him.

The men's evasive answer would indicate that not all is as it seems when it comes to the human idea of religion.

In addition to his conversation with the men, Mr. Wartena claims to have had a medical exam that was performed by some a scanning machine. Soon after, the craft had taken as much water as needed and it was time for Mr. Wartena to leave the ship.

He was asked if he wanted to go with them but he declined. As he walked away from the craft, he saw it rise straight up into the sky and disappear quickly.

Directly following his experience, Mr. Wartena had a general lack of energy and felt weak or slightly ill for a few hours.

This abduction report is important for several reasons, the first being that it takes place long before the modern UFO era and therefore is less likely to be tainted by UFO pop culture. There are also several aspects of his encounter that would later be repeated by others who claim to have been abducted by aliens.

His description of the Nordics and their craft are very similar to what would come out about this species decades later. Some of the technologies he talks about aren't even on the radar as being a possibility in 1940, such as electromagnetic propulsion and scanning machines.

Chapter 13

Arcadia Lake Case

In August of 2013, a fraternity was having a social gathering on the banks of Arcadia Lake in Oklahoma. In the early morning hours, an unnamed witness was alone at the camp, cleaning up.

On that night, it had been his responsibility to be a designated driver. Part of his duty was to see that the party spot was left reasonably clean. Due to these responsibilities, the witness was completely sober.

Shortly after loading bags of trash into the back of his truck, the witness looked over at the lake and noticed a large circular light beneath the water. At first, the light was greenish yellow, but it started flashing in sequence from red to blue and then white.

Stunned, the witness watched as the massive light moved from one side of the lake to the other, and back again. The object repeated this pattern of movement for several minutes until it stopped in the middle of the lake and then shot straight out of the water and into the sky.

Stunned and afraid, the witness ran toward his truck but had to stop and search for his keys. During the few seconds it took for him to find his keys, a bright light appeared behind him. When he turned around, he saw a giant craft hovering about twenty feet off the ground. He claims it was shaped more like a cake than a saucer.

The craft hovered in place for a few seconds before shooting into the sky. When the witness turned back to unlock his truck, he noticed three people standing about fifteen feet away. There were two women and a man. He claims the people were very tall, perhaps ten feet tall. All three had very fair skin and white hair. Their eyes were an extreme blue color.

One of the women communicated with the witness telepathically. She told him not to be afraid and that he had an important role to play and they needed his help. At this point, the witness told the woman that he didn’t know how to help them. She responded by telling him not to worry. When the time came, he would know.

The witness then blacked out and would wake up about an hour later. When the witness regained consciousness, he was more than twenty feet away from his truck. It is very likely an abduction took place during this time, but as of yet there has been no information or further investigation on the incident.

Another witness who had been fishing from the shore of the lake at about the same time claimed to have witnessed the same light beneath the water and to see a craft shoot into the sky. He also claims to have seen a light hovering near the shore where the camp would have been. These were two separate witnesses with no connection.

If the descriptions are accurate, what this encounter reveals is that the Nordics do participate in abductions. The description given by the witness closely matches descriptions others have given.

Chapter 14

The Dionisio Llanca Case

In October of 1973, Dionisio Llanca was visiting his uncle near Bahia Blanca in Argentina. As a truck driver, his job required him to sometimes drive long distances through the night, which is exactly what he had to do that night. To ensure he would be well rested for the drive, he decided to nap during the Siesta period. Mr. Llanca woke at approximately 6:00 PM and started watching TV.

At about 12:30 AM, Mr. Llanca left his uncle's house. That night he was tasked with making a delivery of construction materials to Rio Gallego. This was a trip Mr. Llanca made frequently.

After fueling his truck, Mr. Llanca was on his way when at approximately 1:15 AM he noticed that one of the truck's tires was losing air. Pulling to the side of a dark and deserted road, he started unloading the tools he would need to change the tire.

While changing the tire he noticed an intensely bright light about a mile away.

Believing it could be a car approaching, he didn't pay a lot of attention but a few minutes later there was a bright blue light behind him. When he tried to stand up straight, as to get a better look, he found that he had no strength in his legs.

Looking over his shoulder, he saw a massive disk-shaped craft hovering about 23 feet above the ground. There were three beings standing in front of the craft, staring in his direction. Mr. Llanca recalled being completely paralyzed at this point.

One of the beings approached him and grabbed the collar of his sweater to lift him to his feet. Another of the beings grasped his hand and used some kind of razor to draw blood from his finger.

That was all he remembered before waking up a couple hours later in a rail yard in Rural de Bahía Blanca. He was over five miles from where he'd pulled off to change the truck's tire.

When he regained consciousness he was suffering amnesia. Not only couldn't he remember the encounter but he also couldn't remember who he was. He started walking and blacked out again.

Mr. Llanca eventually regained consciousness and continued wandering aimlessly until another driver found him and took him to a local police station.

He still couldn't remember anything about who he was but he had tremendous pain in his head. The police had no choice but to transport Mr. Llanca to a municipal hospital.

Mr. Llanca was in the hospital a couple days before he woke one night and suddenly remembered who he was and his encounter, though he could still only recall up until the point the beings took blood.

Frantic about the truck he'd left on the side of the road, he tried to get hospital personnel to help him. He eventually learned that when the police located his truck, it still had the jack beneath it and one of the tires removed.

Less than a week later, Mr. Llanca was placed under hypnotic regression to help him remember what happened that night. During regression, he remembered them taking blood and a skin sample from his finger.

At some point, a bright yellow beam of light drew him into the oval opening of the craft. While onboard, he remembered a woman handling several instruments that appeared surgical. He also recalled a massive screen where he could see stars.

During his time on the craft, he recalled it hovering over a body of water where they lowered hoses to draw in water. They also attached some kind of cables to electrical lines.

The woman performed some kind of procedure above his right eyebrow that left a bruise, which is one of the injuries he was later treated for in the hospital.

Mr. Llanca described the beings as appearing human, except with higher foreheads. They had white hair, fair skin, and almond shaped eyes. The difference with this account is that the beings were not tall like most Nordics are described. Mr. Llanca described them as being approximately five feet tall. He also claimed that they spoke to each other but in a language he didn't understand.

Several specialists investigated this case and were unable to debunk it. For the most part, Mr. Llanca's encounters appear similar to what other witnesses have reported, including the process of taking water onto the craft.

Chapter 15

The Enrique Castillo Case

Mr. Castillo's conscious memories of encounters began when he was thirty years old. It was June of 1963 and he was working for a power utility company in Costa Rica.

One day he and two fellow employees were working on an observation outpost near the top of the Irazu volcano when they saw what he described as circular shaped orange objects in the sky. According to Mr. Castillo, the objects appeared to be about 800 feet above the volcano and were about 120 feet in diameter.

One of the objects started to descend. As it did, the light around the craft changed from orange to blue. Some kind of periscope protruded from the top of the craft, while at the same time, the light turned purple.

It is worth noting that many witnesses who claim to have contact with the Nordic beings have reported the craft emitting bright purple or blue light.

Soon the periscope retreated into the craft and flew away at a high rate of speed.

Within a few hours of the sighting, all three witnesses started to feel dizzy and experience severe nausea. Fearing radiation poisoning, they went to the hospital. Their symptoms were treated though the doctors could find no evidence of radiation.

Five years later, Mr. Castillo moved to Brasilia for work. It had been several years since he'd experienced any strange occurrence so he was stunned when one night while driving, he encountered a bright orange light hovering above his car.

Approximately a year later, Mr. Castillo would meet a man by the name of Cyril Weiss who claimed to work for a company in Switzerland. Although Mr. Weiss appeared Nordic, he spoke perfect Spanish, without an accent.

Over the course of the next few days, Mr. Castillo formed a friendship with the young Swiss man, though the man's odd behavior did disturb him. On one occasion, they were driving in Mr. Castillo's car when he accidentally hit a dog, killing it.

The dog belonged to a child who had witnessed the accident. As with most children, the boy was heartbroken at the loss of his dog and started to cry.

Mr. Castillo was startled to see that Mr. Weiss viewed the situation with no empathy at all. He remarked that the boy would accept the dog's death eventually.

Not long after this incident, Mr. Weiss told Mr. Castillo that he not only believed there were alien beings on other planets, but that they could be colonizing the earth in uninhabited areas.

Soon, Mr. Weiss told Mr. Castillo that he was going abroad and would be gone for a long period of time. This should have been the end of Mr. Castillo's association with the young man from Switzerland, but that isn't the case. In the future, he would again encounter Mr. Weiss, but under a different guise and in a different setting.

In 1973 Mr. Castillo would again encounter a spacecraft near a lake in Columbia. He claimed he was taken aboard the craft and subjected to medical examinations. On the craft, he noticed that one of the beings was in fact, the man he had known as Mr. Weiss. The being then confessed that his real name was Krishnamerck and that they had bases in several parts of the world. Mr. Castillo was also told that they have had bases on earth for thousands of years.

Mr. Castillo is told about the human attempt at reverse engineering on captured alien craft, as well as the control of aircraft with the mind. These concepts are regularly discussed today but were not so widely known in the early 70s.

If Mr. Castillo's accounts are authentic, we can assume the Nordics have been interacting with humans for at least three thousand years but likely longer. They tend to be just as interested in human genetic material as the Grays, and are in fact, observed to be present during the abduction carried out by the beings known as the Grays.

If this is the case, it is more than possible the Grays and Nordics are working together on some level and that the Grays could even be working for the Nordics.

Part 3

Chapter 16

Reptilian Abductions

The Reptilian beings reported during abduction experiences tend to be far more aggressive than the Grays and Nordics. There have been reports of Reptilians being present at the same time as the Nordics and Grays, but these encounters tend to be rare. Some theories have it that the Reptilians are the true overlords of the alien agenda.

Although there are a number of conspiracy theories involving these beings and most of them are dismissed as unrealistic, some investigators do believe the Reptilians to be the ancient astronauts who created modern man.

This is unlikely, considering it clearly states in the bible that man was created in the image of God or the gods. This is also hinted at in the Sumerian creation myths.

Some have gone so far as to claim that many of our world leaders are actually these shapeshifting reptiles, including people of royal bloodlines.

There is some legitimacy to claim that royal bloodlines are different based on DNA and blood evidence, there is hardly enough evidence to suggest these people are shape shifting aliens. Many of the conspiracy theories also claim that these beings eat humans, especially children.

Nevertheless, there are reports of people being abducted by beings that resemble reptiles. Witnesses claim these beings are tall; usually around 8 to 10 feet, and that they are very muscular. There is also some indication that these beings are more interested in sexual interaction with humans than other beings that might be visiting the earth.

Chapter 17

Iowa Case

The first memory Jake had of any encounter with Reptilians began in June of 1960, when he was four years old.

One night, Jake woke up to find four beings next to his bed. He recalled that they looked a lot like the Casper the Ghost cartoon character. The beings took Jake through the window, at which point he felt as if he were flying.

Accompanied by the strange beings, he approached some bright lights that made him think he was visiting a carnival. The beings take him into what he described as some kind of door or opening. His memory goes blank until he is again outside and standing in a field.

He claims these beings were eating what looked to be little white sticks. When he asked if he could eat too, one of them handed him a white stick. At this point, he looked at it and realized he was holding a severed finger.

Jake's next memory is of being in his bed and feeling terrified. He wanted to go tell his parents what happened but couldn't seem to move. Several nights later, the blank part of his memory came back.

He remembered being in a room with a table. Sitting around this table were large Reptilian creatures. Jake recalls seeing a pile of dead children in the middle of the table and the creatures feasting on the bodies.

This was the first abduction experience Jake remembers, though he claims to have had several more throughout his life. It is possible this was a nightmare, but it did apparently leave him with a lasting impression.

It is worth noting that thousands of children go missing in the United States every year and are never found. While most of these can be explained, when you include the probability of a criminal element is involved, if Jake's account is to be taken literally, there is the possibility these beings are responsible for at least some of these disappearances, though not probable.

There is scant evidence to suggest that reptilian aliens are running amok and feasting on humans in such a manner. If this were the case, it is unlikely the witness would have lived to tell his story.

If indeed it was anything other than a nightmare, it is possible these beings planted a screen memory in order to gauge psychological reaction.

Although the scenario in this story isn’t likely, it is worth mentioning that there are some ufologists who are former and current law enforcement officials that do put some credence on the idea that aliens are responsible for some murders and disappearances.

Chapter 18
Waking Nightmare

As a child, Edward had what he describes as a waking nightmare. It wasn't until later in life that this witness started to wonder if his experience could have actually been an alien abduction.

While growing up, Edward and his brother shared a room. They had twin beds that were located on opposite sides of the room.

It wasn't unusual for one or both of the boys to get up at night and turn on their bedroom light so they could play video games, which tended to upset their parents.

To prevent this, Edward would have to go sleep in his mother's room for part of the night. This tactic was used to ensure he and his brother went to sleep on time. Once Edward was asleep, his mother would carry him to his own room and put him to bed.

There were times when Edward would wake up during this ritual and would have trouble fall asleep until much later.

One night, the ritual completely changed. His mother picked him up and carried him out of the room. On this occasion, she appeared exactly the same as she usually did, but there was something different about her.

When Edward opened his eyes, his mother looked down at him and he noticed her eyes were different. On this night mother's eyes were a greenish color and had a strange slit or diamond shaped pupil.

Suddenly she opened her mouth and Edward saw what he described as sharp teeth and a serpent tongue. Terrified, Edward couldn't move or speak.

That is when she hissed.

Edward recalls her carrying him down a long, dark hallway. It was at this point that he actually does slip back into what he thought was sleep. While sleeping, he dreams that little monsters are chasing him and he's hiding from them. Suddenly, the wall opens up and two lizard-looking creatures walk through it.

They start hissing at what Edward thought were little monsters before turning their attention to Edward. Somehow they seemed to know where he was hiding. Then the lizard creatures were standing right next to him. This is when he lost consciousness again.

The next morning, Edward asked his mother if she'd carried him back to his bed the night before but she claimed that she hadn't and that she thought Edward's father had carried him to bed.

This case could be an alien abduction but it could just as possibly be a dream. Many abduction victims tend to recall their experiences through dreams or nightmares.

If it is a valid experience, it goes a long way in reinforcing the idea that reptilians make use of screen memories, as is the case when he looked up and saw what he thought was his mother.

It also tends to discount the theory that these creatures eat children, as the boy lived to tell his story, though what their agenda would be is a mystery.

Chapter 19

Road Trip and Alien Abduction

This next incident takes place in Kentucky when Ken and his friend, Max were teens. The two friends decided to hitchhike to Ken's grandfather's, who lived in another part of the state.

The two friends frequently hitchhiked to get where they wanted to go so this trip was not a lot different. Before leaving, they made sure they were stocked up on food, water and cash for the trip. Ken had cousins living close to his grandfather's place so the plan was to get together with his family and have some fun.

They started out early in the morning and didn't have a problem getting their first ride, though that ride only took them to about the halfway mark. After that, they had a lot more trouble getting a ride. They walked for several hours, stopping at the side of the road to rest and have a meal.

It was late afternoon before they managed to get another ride. This time they were taken to the freeway exit, which was great but they still had several miles to walk. To get to Ken's grandfather's place they had to walk through town. Deciding they needed more snacks before heading out of town, they made a stop at a local store.

It was already early evening by the time they left the store. The two teenagers walked the small, two-lane highway but didn't get far before they were stopped by the highway patrol.

As soon as the two friends reached the patrol car, the officer got out and asked them what they were doing walking so late. They told him they were on their way to visit relatives outside of town.

At this point, the officer takes them to the police station in the town they'd just left so they could contact family members and verify their stories. Once the police were confident the boys were actually doing what they claimed to be doing, the officer told them that he would give them a ride so as to ensure they arrived at Ken's grandfather's place, safely

Strangely enough, the officer stopped as soon as he reached the edge of town and told the boys that it was as far as he was taking them.

Although the side trip to the police station put them way behind, the boys didn't have any choice but to continue walking. By this time it was nearly dark and they still had at least thirteen to go before reaching their destination.

Soon it was pitch black. The darkness was interrupted occasionally by passing traffic but there wasn't a lot of that due to the fact it was midweek. With it being a warm summer night, the two boys thought about camping on the side of the road and finishing their trip in the morning.

Suddenly, Max stopped and asked Ken if he saw that thing cross the road and run into the woods. Ken told his friend that he hadn't noticed anything and that he probably just seen a deer.

About this time an orange light came out of the clouds above them. At first, they thought they were seeing a helicopter but were confused at how fast it was going and the odd way it was maneuvering, which didn't seem plausible for a helicopter.

Eventually, the light disappeared and they kept walking. The two friends had gone a couple miles when the light returned and headed straight for them. As it silently hovered above their heads, there was no longer any doubt. This craft was no helicopter. In fact, it was larger than a 737.

The last thing Ken remembers before blacking out is staring up at the craft in utter amazement. When he gained consciousness, he was in some kind of transparent cylinder that ran from the floor to the ceiling.

Frightened, Ken started to panic but then heard a voice in his head telling him that he should remain calm.

A reptilian stood in front of the cylinder. Ken described as being about eight feet tall. He was wearing some kind of breastplate and what appeared to be shin and ankle guards. The reptilian told Ken his name, though he was unable to remember it later. Ken started looking around the room and noticed another glass cylinder. Max was inside the cylinder and appeared to be in a state of suspended animation.

When Ken looked back at the being, he was again told not to be afraid. He wouldn't be harmed. Somewhat calm, Ken took notice of the rest of the room. The one thing he remembered very clearly is how high the ceiling was. He claims it had to be over fifteen feet from the floor.

The room was large and circular. The walls were a shiny gold color and reflected light. It was then that the reptilian asked Ken if he was interested in the ship.

Ken nodded.

The being then proceeds to tell him that the ship is powered by a magnetic field and plasma, but didn't provide much detail beyond that.

Ken doesn't recall many of the details of the encounter but he does remember being told that he was going somewhere. When he objected, the being told him that he had to go because he was part of a royal bloodline.

Ken then told the being that he had no wish to go with him and asked to be taken back. The being nodded, which Ken took to mean they would return him and his friend to the side of the road.

The reptilian then told Ken that at some point there would be a massive tragedy on earth but that he shouldn't worry about it because they would come for him before it happened.

During their conversation, the reptilian stood next to what looked to be some kind of computer control panel. Throughout the experience, the reptilian was not at all aggressive toward Ken.

Ken's next conscious memory was of being in someone's car and pulling up in front of his grandfather's house. When he related the incident to his grandfather, Ken discovered that he'd also had encounters with reptilian beings.

Ken's story is far different than the previous stories of reptilian encounters. There is a possibility that people are actually encountering different species of reptilians or perhaps there was something different about Ken.

The mention of a royal bloodline isn't new. A few abductees have been told this, though there is some confusion as to which species this bloodline would belong to. It could be the Reptilians or the Nordics.

Those with and Rh-negative blood type or those who come from a bloodline with members who are Rh-negative can often trace their genealogy back to the royals of Europe. Another connection is that many abductees tend to have a negative blood type.

When someone has a negative blood type, what this means is that his or her blood does not contain the rhesus monkey protein. This protein can be linked to just about every primate on earth, except those with negative blood. It is estimated that less than 5% of the world's population has negative blood.

Females with a negative blood type will have difficulty mating with a male with a positive blood type. The female's body will build up antibodies and try to abort the child, as it would if it were trying to fight off a foreign substance or infection. Today, there are treatments that help prevent the female’s body from rejecting the fetus, but it is still a risk factor when these two blood types have a child.

Humans are thought to descend from a common ancestor, but if this is true, they should all have the monkey protein in their blood. This is not the case. Either there was some type of mutation that involved a deletion of this protein from the blood, or those with a negative bloodline are descended from a different ancestor.

Chapter 20

Police Officer Abduction in Nebraska

In 1967, Nebraska police officer, Herbert Schirmer claimed to have been abducted by aliens. Over the years, many in law enforcement have come forward with stories of strange lights in the sky and flying saucers, but the Schirmer case is among one of the earliest documented cases.

Due to his father being a member of the United States Air Force, Mr. Schirmer spent his childhood moving from one base to another.

At seventeen, Mr. Schirmer joined the United States Navy. After his tour of duty, he returned to Nebraska, where his parents were living at the time.

Mr. Schirmer decided to settle in the area and as he'd always been interested in law enforcement, he joined the Nebraska State Highway Patrol.

Mr. Schirmer's encounter started early one morning about 2:20 AM. He'd just completed a check on two different fuel stations and proceeded to pull onto the highway. He made contact with the sheriff's department to report that he'd finished his check.

While replacing the radio's mic, he noticed some flashing lights up ahead and at first thought what he was seeing was a big truck. As he drew closer, he flipped on the patrol car's high beams. At this point, the object started to rise into the air.

He describes the craft as being shaped much like a football and having what appeared to be a catwalk around the exterior. He described the object as metallic with a red-orange glow coming from beneath it.

A sudden white flash enveloped the patrol car and started pulling it to the left side of the road, toward a field. He recalls a strange tingling sensation as the car was pulled up an embankment and into the field.

At this point, the craft landed in the field. Mr. Schirmer relates that some legs came out of the bottom of the craft before it set down.

A hatch opened on the side of the craft and what appeared to be a humanoid being emerged. The being was holding an object in each hand that appeared to be silver and egg-shaped. Another being followed the first and they both headed toward the patrol car.

When the being was at the door of the patrol car, the object in his hand started to emit a green light at which point Mr. Schirmer was put into a state of paralysis. He was conscious but couldn't move.

The second being stepped over to the car window and from the corner of his eye, Mr. Schirmer saw the being lift his arm and noticed he was holding a silver, pen-shaped object with a ball on the end of it.

The being opened the car door and pressed the object to his neck, at which point Mr. Schirmer felt some pain. Suddenly, he was raised out of the seat and once outside the car, he was set on his feet. The being then asked him if he was the watchman for the town.

Mr. Schirmer replied that he was. Before he could say anything else, he started moving toward the craft, though he said it felt more like he was floating than walking.

He entered the craft on the first level, which he claimed was a circular room and described four-foot cylinder objects lining the walls that reminded him of huge batteries. In the middle of the room was what he described as something similar to a cocoon, except it was spinning and emitting a variety of different colors.

Mr. Schirmer asked about the cocoon and was told that the object was needed to operate the craft. They explained the cocoon created electric magnetism.

Throughout the rest of the event, he is shown the craft and told about stuff that he doesn't remember until later. In fact, the only aspect of the encounter he remembered at the time was seeing the craft hover above his car.

When he returned to base, he wrote in his report that he'd seen a UFO but didn't add detail. Mr. Schirmer did have a red welt on his neck and started to experience headaches. He later underwent a regressive hypnosis with Dr. Sprinkle at which time memory of his encountered surfaced.

Most researchers don't place a lot of significance in this case due to the fact that the beings appear too human, though they were wearing suits with a reptilian symbol. The report of drawing electricity from lines and claims of bases on Venus, were also cause for doubt, though other witnesses have claimed to see crafts draw electricity from lines.

Additional details that came out during his regression include being told that the beings had been keeping an eye on humans for a long time and that someday man would also explore the stars.

The government was in charge of the investigation, which was part of Project Bluebook. Many investigators claim that Project Bluebook often didn't thoroughly investigate cases and were anxious to debunk most claims.

Due to this possibility, it is important to keep in mind that those working with Project Bluebook might have reason to suggest absurd and unscientific elements during hypnosis and basically plant false memories. In this case, the victim would experience a mixture of false memories as well as real memories.

It is worth noting that Mr. Schirmer's experience is similar to a number of other UFO sightings, including missing time. He didn't arrive back at base until 3:00 AM, which means he had nearly an hour that he couldn't account for until he was put under hypnosis.

Taking this into consideration, it is possible that he was abducted and the beings themselves planted the more bizarre elements of the story as a screen memory to confuse him if he should recall the event in detail.

A newspaper article at the time reported that information of Mr. Schirmer's sighting was sent to Wright-Patterson Air Force base, which was who handled reports of UFOs at the time. The article also claimed that radiation testing was done on the location where Mr. Schirmer saw the UFO. The test revealed evidence of elevated radiation.

If this report is accurate, it would mean the Air Force took Mr. Schirmer's sighting seriously and there was some physical evidence to back it up.

Part 4

Chapter 21

UFOs, Aliens, and the Physical Evidence

The idea that no physical evidence exists to back up UFO sightings and reports of abductions just isn't true. What is true is that most scientists ignore this evidence because the idea of alien visitation doesn't fit in their tiny little box of what they consider to be real, which is almost as bad as those who stubbornly stick by the notion the earth is only six thousand years old.

The reality is that there are a number of scientists that have had their own experiences but they keep quiet about it so as not to chance ridicule and the destruction of their careers.

Due to the fact that most of the scientific community doesn't take the issue seriously, the media tends to ignore what would otherwise be considered to be compelling evidence. Although some sightings are covered, in most cases it's done in a humorous way.

The good news is that this trend is starting to change. Many well-respected professionals have come out in the open and talked about their own research into abductions and UFOs. One such person was a highly respected Harvard Psychiatrist by the name of Dr. John Mack. Dr. Mack spent many years investigating abduction cases and eventually came to the conclusion that there was definitely some substance to these claims.

Dr. Roger Lear was a surgeon who dedicated many years to abduction research. During that time he surgically removed and studied alleged alien implants from abduction victims. Today, there are a number of professionals that take the idea of alien visitation seriously.

Chapter 22

The Radar Evidence

One scientist who has taken an interest in studying the UFO phenomena is Peter Sturrock, a professor of applied physics at Stanford University. Dr. Sturrock likes to focus on evidence, radar evidence in particular.

In the midst of studying mathematics at Cambridge University, he was forced to put his academics on hold to due to the war. Dr. Sturrock joined the Telecommunications Research Establishment in 1942 and helped them create a radar system. Dr. Sturrock is of the opinion that the radar data is proof that we have unidentified craft flying in our skies, though there is no way of knowing from where that craft originates.

Although some skeptics would like to dismiss UFO sightings due to what they cite as lack of physical evidence, the fact, is if there are credible witnesses with accounts that coincide with radar detection, this is evidence.

There are numerous UFO sightings backed up by radar. One such case is the JAL Alaska case.

This incident took place on November 17, 1986, and was reported by Captain Kenju Terauchi, who was piloting a Japan Air Lines 747 cargo jet.

According to Captain Terauchi's report, they were near Mt. McKinley when they saw a strange craft with extremely bright lights. He claimed that the maneuvers and speeds of the craft would be impossible for an aircraft. Captain Terauchi remarked that the craft was flying as if there was no gravity.

The crewmembers of the Japan Air cargo jet were adamant about what they'd seen, but they weren't the only ones to have witnessed the event. It was also recorded on radar.

John Callahan, the FAA Division Chief of the Accidents and Investigations branch witnessed the event on radar.

Over thirty minutes of the incident was picked up on radar. He would later state that for a half hour, he'd watched the radar as a UFO pursued the Japanese jet. During the same interview, Mr. Callahan claimed that President Reagan's Scientific Study Team, along with the FBI and the CIA met with him about the incident and seemed to be intensely interested in collecting the supporting data.

This is just one of the numerous cases backed by radar data, which means these unidentified flying objects cannot all be attributed to overactive imaginations or misidentification.

Chapter 23

UFO Fragment

In 1985, Bob White and a friend were traveling from Denver to Las Vegas when they saw something extraordinary in the night sky.

Bob was asleep in the passenger seat when his friend woke him to point out a strange light in the sky. As they drew closer to the light, it got bigger. Curious, they decided to pull off the road so they could get a better look at the object.

By this time the light was so bright, Bob was forced to shield his eyes. For some reason his friend decided to turn on the car's headlights, perhaps to signal to whatever was in the air.

The light shot up into the sky and appeared to merge with a larger light, at which point something was ejected from the craft.

When Bob went to investigate, he found a glowing red glob that was too hot to touch. Once the object cooled enough to handle, he picked it up to examine it. The jagged fragment of what appeared to be metal was nine inches long and weighed approximately one and a half pounds.

Deciding to take it with him, he placed it in the trunk of his car. Later, Bob had a piece of the object sent to the national laboratory at Los Alamos to undergo element composition testing.

After several weeks, Mr. White finally managed to speak with a technician about the results. According to Bob, the technician he spoke with was extremely excited about the results and claimed the object was definitely extraterrestrial.

Excited to share the news, Mr. White contacted a newspaper columnist and told him of the results. Unfortunately, when the reporter contacted the lab the same technician claimed he'd never said any such thing. The reporter was further told that the technician's supervisors had instructed him not to talk to anyone about the test results. When other journalists tried to get in touch with the lab they couldn't even get a return phone call.

Frustrated, Bob decided to send the object to eight additional labs, including MIT. Results from all eight labs concluded that the structure was compiled of mostly aluminum but the ratio of isotopes closely matched the composition of isotopes analyzed from meteors that scientists believed to have been subjected to the atmosphere on Mars.

This case could be shrugged off except for the fact that another object almost identical to what Bob White discovered was found about forty years earlier.

According to files obtained through the Freedom of Information act, in the 1940s the Counter Intelligence Core in Denmark recovered an object that closely matches the one found by Mr. White. According to the wording of the document, Denmark concluded the object recovered was a piece of a flying saucer.

In 2004, Bob White was subjected to three separate polygraph tests administered by law enforcement and a certified polygraph examiner. Mr. White passed all three exams.

Prior to his experience, Bob White didn’t believe UFOs were extraterrestrial in origin, but claims that after what he saw that night, he’s had a change of heart.

Chapter 24

Implants

Dr. Roger Leir was one of those professionals who stepped forward and took the subject of alien abduction seriously. Throughout his career, Dr. Leir surgically removed seventeen objects from alleged alien abductees.

One of the most compelling cases involving an implant is the Tim Cullen case. One evening in May of 1978, Tim and his wife were driving north on Highway 59 in Colorado when they encountered what appeared to them to be a UFO.

The couple stopped and got out to get a better look at the glowing object. Although they only remembered being at the location for a few minutes, when they arrived home they realized the trip had taken an hour longer than what it should have.

During a routine x-ray twenty years later, an unexplained piece of metal was discovered in Tim's arm. It was then that he started to wonder if the object could be connected to the UFO he saw in 1978.

Tim contacted Dr. Roger Leir and related that a metallic object had been discovered in his arm and that he suspected he could be the victim of alien abduction. Dr. Leir asked Tim to send the x-rays so he could take a look.

After examining the x-rays, Dr. Leir agreed that there was a foreign object in his arm and it appeared to be metallic. He agreed to remove the object and scheduled the surgery February 5, 2000. The entire procedure was recorded on video.

In spite of the fact that Dr. Leir couldn't locate an entry scar, a 6mm metallic object was discovered just beneath the skin and removed during the surgical procedure.

Two strange anomalies Dr. Leir observed was the lack of inflammation in the area, which should have been there as the body reacts to a foreign object. Another was the number of nerve endings near the object, which should not have been there.

The nerves found near the object are normally located in the hands and feet and respond to touch, temperature and pressure.

According to Dr. Leir, he could find no logical explanation as to how or why these nerves would be attached to a foreign piece of metal in Tim's arm.

In another case, he removed a metal object that was actually emitting radio frequencies. Dr. Leir has had some of these objects analyzed for composition and discovered they contain elements that could not have originated on earth.

Many of the implants he removed were surrounded by a membrane that appeared to act as a barrier, preventing the body from rejecting the object.

After years of investigating implants, Dr. Leir concluded some form of intelligent life is visiting earth for some unknown purpose.

This is just a sample of the massive amount of physical evidence UFO researchers have gathered over the years. Today, some investigators are approaching cases of alien abduction in the same way they would approach any crime scene.

A scientific and professional approach to the gathering of trace evidence is extremely important when it comes proving the authenticity of reported UFO sightings and abduction cases.

Chapter 25

The Alien Agenda

The alien agenda is one of the most baffling mysteries of our time, though researchers are getting closer to uncovering exactly what these beings are after. Today, there are researchers who are actually using forensic science to investigate reports of alien contact. Implants have been removed from victims and analysis reveals the implants to be surrounded by a biological membrane that keeps the body from rejecting them. Beneath the membrane, they have discovered a gold type metal in the shape of a tiny seed.

Although researchers aren't absolutely sure about the purpose of the implants, many believe they are probably used to track abductees in much the same way researchers tag animals in the wild and track them over time.

The collection of biological material does seem to be the main purpose of the abduction encounters by the beings known as the Grays, and perhaps by extension, the Nordics as well.

Some encounters with the Reptilian beings also involve physical examinations and collection of biological material, though these don't seem to be the main focus. There is some indication that there may be more than one species of Reptilians interacting with humans.

One theory is that these reptilians are the ancient gods of the Sumerians and that they are actually demonic entities that want to take over the world and enslave humans. The problem with this theory is that these beings would hardly have to go through so much trouble to do this when they have the technology to destroy all life on the planet. An advanced race would not need to go through thousands of years of covert operations in order to invade us.

At the same time, it is also unlikely that extraterrestrials would need to study us over thousands of years. It would seem the reason for collecting biological material could very well be for breeding purposes. Some of the explanations that have been put out for this include they are a dying race and need to create hybrids to survive or they bust create hybrids so that they can eventually inhabit the earth, but again, this doesn't make a lot of sense.

Perhaps they are creating hybrid beings to inhabit other planets or to create a workforce.

One of the more solid explanations actually goes back to the Anunnaki. If these ancient aliens or gods were responsible for giving ancient man a boost in evolution, it is obvious this species likes to experiment with genetics.

Humans could be providing genetic stock that enables these beings to continue creating other species. This is a possibility that deserves more discussion and research.

Another theory is that the beings encountered during abductions and the UFO that have been sighted are not extraterrestrial but interdimensional. It is a possibility that at least some entities humans encounter could fall under this category. According to some scientific theories, humans can detect only three dimensions, but there are at least eleven dimensions and perhaps even more.

One of the main reasons for placing these entities in this category is their ability to appear and disappear. They can walk through walls, transport abductees through walls, and all seem to be telepathic. While these are good reasons to consider interdimensional origins, it is just as likely these abilities are the result of advanced technologies.

The technologies of today would have appeared to be magic to ancient man. It is entirely possible that in the future there will be a technology that enables the manipulation of what appears to be solid matter.

The fact is, nothing in the universe is actually solid.

Physical atoms are made up of vortices of energy that are constantly spinning and vibrating. Each one of these atoms radiates its own unique energy signature. When studied under a microscope, it becomes clear that atoms, at their deepest level are void of physical structure and are in fact made up of invisible energy. This would mean that everything in the universe is made of invisible energy, including that wall the aliens walk through. Energy can be manipulated.

Perhaps an advanced civilization has created a way to scatter atoms which in turn makes it possible to walk through walls are beam someone up to a hovering spacecraft.

During daytime sightings, some witnesses have claimed to see the physical image of the ship come in and out of focus, and then disappear before reappearing a second later. It would seem that they have some kind of cloaking technology that can make their ships invisible to the human eye. This also is not beyond the realm of science.

In addition, traversing the distance between stars can be explained with future technologies. Already, some physicist claim there could be a way to create a shortcut by bending time and space. In essence, creating star gates.

Most abductees claim the beings that take them communicate through telepathy. It is doubtful that all alien species would have the same ability to do this, though they could all be in possession of technology that would make it possible for them to communicate with any species in their own language.

Although it might seem as if the communication is telepathic, it is more likely there is solid science behind these communications.

Today, scientists have developed a way for paralyzed people to control computers, TVs, etc, wirelessly, with only their thoughts.

If modern scientists can accomplish this, there is no reason to think an advanced race couldn't develop a way to communicate with another species in the same way. Perhaps this is one of the reasons for the implants found during head x-rays.

Most of what seems impossible with UFOs and alien abduction can be explained with advanced science. It is for this reason that it is just as likely the visitors are extraterrestrial as opposed to interdimensional.

Uncovering the alien agenda depends on understanding who and what these beings are. A scientific approach is the most useful way to do this. It is true that our current level of scientific understanding is not sufficient enough to unravel the mystery completely, but it is a good start.

JOIN THE FRINGE CONCEPTS Newsletter and get news of special discounts and new releases, plus download Creepy Ghost Stories for free. Sign up for your free book here, http://eepurl.com/cBog4H

The Author

T.L. Parker is an author, researcher and former Private Investigator. After studying Criminal Justice and Anthropology at Weber State University, T.L. Parker went into Private Investigations, eventually branching out to research UFOs and other unexplained phenomena. Follow T.L. Parker on Facebook, https://www.facebook.com/authorthparker/